Course Catalog Description

This course explores human sexuality and development across the lifespan from a range of perspectives. Dominant cultural assumptions about heterosexuality and the experiences of lesbian, bisexual, gay, trans, two-spirited, and queer persons will be considered. Classical developmental theories will also be examined along with their predominant theoretical critiques.

Throughout CityU's Master of Counselling Program, students are encouraged to film themselves and review their counselling skills when working in dyads, triads or groups. Note that the consent of all participants involved must be acquired before any filming may proceed.

Consideration of Social Justice Issues

City University in Canada is committed to social justice, access, and inclusion. Throughout their studies in the Master of Counselling Program, students are invited to reflect on a range of social justice questions as follows:

- How does our own experience of privilege impact our ability to critically evaluate counselling theories and the provision of counselling services within the counselling field?
- What is the experience of racialized and othered individuals within counselling, e.g., are clients able to see themselves represented within their counsellor, or the counselling experience? Are indigenous healing practices acknowledged?
- Why do the majority of counselling theories represent the academic and research views of predominantly white, middle-class, European, male perspective? Which counselling theories break away from this dominant perspective, and how do they contribute to our overall understanding of working with cultures and identities that differ from our own?

Territorial Acknowledgment & Statement of Inclusion

City University in Canada (CityU) acknowledges and respects that we are on the traditional territories of First Nations, Metis, and Inuit Peoples. Each of our campuses resides on a different territory, each with their own distinct languages, culture, and traditions. In the spirit of reconciliation and in respect of the diversity among nations, we would like to acknowledge the territories for each of our campuses.

We acknowledge that our Vancouver, British Columbia campus is located on the unceded and traditional territory of the Coast Salish Nations of xʷməθkʷəy̓əm (Musqueam), səɫ ɪlwətaʔɪ (Tsleil-Waututh), and Skwxwú7mesh (Squamish) Peoples. We acknowledge that our Southern Vancouver Island campus is located on the traditional and unceded territory of the Coast Salish Peoples of the Esquimalt, Songhees, and W̱SÁNEĆ Nations.

The lands that we at CityU are on hold the history and cultural traditions of many Indigenous Peoples. We recognize that Indigenous traditions, knowledge, and languages have been deeply damaged by the ongoing colonization of and biases against Indigenous Peoples. We acknowledge these territories with respect to their heritage and communities. With this acknowledgment, we are committed to begin building and maintaining respectful relationships with local Indigenous communities. CityU honours human diversity in all its forms and is committed to the principle of universal human dignity. We further acknowledge that our learning community is greatly enriched through the voices and perspectives of staff, faculty, and students from all intersections of society including LGBTQ+, BIPOC and diversely-abled communities.

Course Resources

Required and recommended resources to complete coursework and assignments are found on the course Reading List. The reading list can be found in the top navigation menu in Brightspace as well as from the library homepage.

Note: Required resources that must be purchased by the student are tagged “Purchase from a vendor of your choosing.” Required resources with a direct link, “Available through CityU Library”, are available at no cost to students.

Students in Canada will see required resources they need to purchase tagged “Purchase from the Canadian Bookstore.” Students outside the U.S. and Canada should contact their advisor or textbook coordinator for additional information.

Program Learning Outcomes

The content of this course aligns with the following Learning Outcomes:

PO 2 Counselling Theory: Articulate and apply a range of coherent theoretical approaches that are relevant to clients’ concerns and aspirations.

PO 3 Diversity & Collaboration: Collaborate with people of diverse ethnicity, culture, gender, sexual orientation, physical ability, religious beliefs and socioeconomic status.

2.1 Counselling Theory: Analyze a range of traditional and contemporary counselling theories, their sociocultural contexts, and their applicability to individual, couple, family, and group counselling.

2.2 Client Goals: Evaluate clients' treatment goals from a range of theoretical perspectives appropriate for clients' identities, culture and context.

2.3 Application: Apply theoretical models to develop and implement treatment plans effectively.

3.1 Identity Formation: Explore the process of identity formation, the intersecting dimensions of identity, and their relevance to case conceptualization and treatment planning.

3.2 Self-Awareness: Assess personal identity to develop self-awareness of attitudes, beliefs, knowledge, and skills that inform counsellors' worldviews and influence case conceptualization and treatment planning.

3.3 Power & Privilege: Contextualize personal cultural identity's effect on therapeutic rapport building by clarifying how power and privilege marginalize and oppress some groups, while normalizing the white, patriarchal, hetero, ableist experience.

3.4 Diversity & Collaboration: Articulate the value of diversity and collaborate with people of diverse identities and backgrounds.

Course Assignments and Grading

The grades earned for the course will be derived using CityU's decimal grading system, based on the following:

Sexuality Research Paper	40%
Professionalism, Collaboration, Engagement	20%
TOTAL	100%

Course Assignments Details

Sexuality Reflection Assignment (30%) – DUE JULY 31st at 9 am.

Purpose

The therapeutic relationship is one of the most powerful instruments of change. As such, one of the greatest responsibilities of becoming a psychotherapist is developing the capacity to understand ourselves with honesty, humility, and compassion.

This assignment invites you into a process of deep self-reflection—not for the purpose of self-disclosure, but to cultivate greater clinical self-awareness. Our personal experiences, family systems, cultural contexts, religious beliefs, relationships, and societal messages all contribute to how we understand sexuality. Whether recognized or not, these experiences inevitably shape the assumptions, values, emotional reactions, and blind spots we bring into the therapy room.

This paper is intended to help you identify those influences before they unconsciously influence your clinical work.

Unlike many graduate assignments that primarily assess your ability to synthesize research, this paper asks you to integrate scholarly literature with thoughtful personal reflection. It is often one of the few opportunities during graduate training to intentionally examine how your own development informs your professional identity. Approach this assignment with courage, curiosity, and self-compassion.

Assignment

Prepare an 8–10 page paper exploring the evolution of your own sexual development and identity.

Your reflection should be grounded in scholarly literature while thoughtfully examining the experiences that have shaped your understanding of sexuality, relationships, intimacy, desire, gender, love, consent, pleasure, vulnerability, and human connection.

This is not an autobiography. Rather, it is an opportunity to examine how your personal narrative influences your emerging identity as a clinician.

Areas to Consider

You are not expected to address every question. Instead, use these prompts to guide a thoughtful and meaningful reflection.

Your Story

- What messages about sexuality did you receive throughout childhood and adolescence?
- How was sexuality discussed—or avoided—in your family?
- Who became your earliest models for relationships, intimacy, masculinity, femininity, or partnership?
- What cultural, religious, spiritual, or community values shaped your beliefs?
- How did peers, media, education, pornography, social media, or significant relationships influence your understanding of sexuality?
- What experiences challenged or transformed your beliefs over time?
- How have your experiences shaped your relationship with your body, your desires, and your sexual experiences, including early experiences of flirtation, romance, and intimacy?
- Reflect on your first sexual or intimate encounter (to the extent you feel comfortable): was it experienced as positive, negative, or mixed, and what meanings did you make of it at the time?
- How have these experiences influenced your current comfort level with sexual topics, both personally and professionally?
- In what ways might your personal history shape your capacity to receive, understand, and support future clients as they bring forward their own experiences of distress, confusion, or concern related to sexuality?

Exploring Your Biases

One of the primary goals of this assignment is to explore the origins of your own assumptions and biases.

Reflect on questions such as:

- Which beliefs about sexuality feel "obvious" or "normal" to you? Where did those beliefs originate?

- Which sexual identities, relationship structures, or expressions of sexuality feel easiest for you to understand? Which feel more challenging?
- When do you notice discomfort, uncertainty, judgment, or hesitation arising within yourself?
- What experiences, family values, cultural narratives, or personal history may contribute to these reactions?
- Are there topics you would feel less confident discussing with a client? Why?
- How might your lived experience both strengthen and limit your capacity to understand others?

Remember that bias is a universal aspect of being human. Professional competence is demonstrated not by the absence of bias, but by the willingness to recognize, examine, and thoughtfully manage it.

Becoming your Therapist

Reflect on your experience of engaging in this assignment as if you were both the client and the therapist. Notice what emerged for you throughout the writing process—emotionally, cognitively, and physically.

Consider:

- What thoughts, feelings, or reactions arose as you reflected on your own development?
- Were there moments of discomfort, resistance, curiosity, or insight? What might those responses be telling you?
- What did you learn about yourself that you had not previously considered?
- How did it feel to examine your own beliefs, assumptions, or biases more closely?
- If you were your own therapist, what themes or patterns would you be most curious to explore further?
- What questions remain unanswered, and what might they invite you to continue exploring?

Use this reflection as an opportunity to deepen your capacity for self-awareness, recognizing that the ability to thoughtfully examine your own internal experience is foundational to ethical and effective clinical practice.

Support this section of your reflections by integrating relevant scholarly literature throughout your paper. Rather than adding research as an afterthought, use it to deepen your understanding of your own developmental experiences and emerging clinical identity.

Evaluation

Graduate-level reflection is measured not by how much of your story you disclose, but by your ability to thoughtfully examine the origins of your beliefs, recognize the lens through which you view sexuality, and articulate how this awareness shapes your ethical and culturally responsive work as a clinician.

Your paper will be evaluated on your ability to:

- Demonstrate meaningful depth of self-reflection.
- Critically examine the origins of your beliefs, assumptions, and biases.

- Integrate personal insight with contemporary scholarly literature.
- Demonstrate curiosity, openness, and cultural humility.
- Connect personal development to professional identity and ethical clinical practice.
- Communicate ideas clearly using APA (7th edition) standards.

Final Reflection

The goal of this assignment is not to determine whether your experiences or beliefs are "right" or "wrong." Rather, it is to deepen your awareness of the lens through which you understand human sexuality.

Our clients will inevitably invite us into conversations that challenge our assumptions, values, and lived experiences. The clinicians who create the safest therapeutic spaces are not those who have resolved every aspect of their own story, but those who remain committed to ongoing self-reflection, humility, and growth.

Ultimately, the most effective therapists are those who possess the courage to examine themselves as thoughtfully as they seek to understand others.

Peer Review Practice (10%) – In class practice on August 21st.

Following our guest speaker's presentation, students will have the opportunity to translate theory into clinical practice through a structured experiential activity. Drawing on the guest speaker's lived experience, students will practice formulating empathic statements that demonstrate attunement, validation, and cultural humility. The focus is not on solving, interpreting, or challenging the speaker's experience, but on developing the capacity to communicate safety, curiosity, and connection in ways that foster a strong therapeutic alliance.

Students will work in groups of three, rotating through the roles of client, therapist, and observer, ensuring that each student experiences all three perspectives. The "client" will draw upon themes inspired by the guest speaker's story or a similar clinical scenario. The therapist's role is to remain present, empathically attuned, and responsive, supporting the client in moving from a place of emotional distress toward greater inner ease, regulation, and connection in the present moment. The observer will provide constructive feedback, paying particular attention to the therapist's use of empathy, presence, validation, and ability to facilitate emotional safety.

Guided by the instructor, peer feedback will emphasize strengths, identify opportunities for growth, and encourage thoughtful reflection on therapeutic presence, language, and the integration of course concepts into clinical practice. This activity is designed to strengthen students' confidence in responding to diverse client experiences with empathy, respect, and clinical intentionality, while reinforcing that meaningful therapeutic healing often begins by helping clients feel deeply understood before seeking to create external changes.

Group Sexuality Research Paper (40%) - DUE FRIDAY SEPTEMBER 4th at 9 am.

In groups of 3-5, students will write a literature review on a topic related to the interrelationship between human development and sexuality across the lifespan. This literature review will explore contemporary thinking and critiques of the topic under review. Culture, ethnicity, age, class, and gender will also be considered.

Human Development and Sexuality

The purpose of this assignment is to deepen your understanding of a contemporary issue in human sexuality by critically examining the scientific literature through a developmental, relational, and biopsychosocial lens.

As future clinicians, your role extends beyond understanding what research says. You are also called to evaluate the quality of the evidence, recognize competing perspectives, identify gaps in the literature, and consider how current knowledge informs ethical, culturally responsive, and evidence-based clinical practice.

Throughout this course, we emphasized approaching sexuality with curiosity rather than judgment. As you engage with the literature, challenge yourself to remain open to perspectives that may differ from your own. The strongest literature reviews do not simply answer questions, they deepen them. Consider how this topic might shape your development as a clinician and influence the way you create a safe, respectful, and affirming space for future clients.

Assignment Overview

Write an 8–10-page literature review exploring a contemporary topic related to the intersection of human development and sexuality.

Your review should synthesize current research rather than simply summarize individual articles. Demonstrate your ability to compare findings across studies, identify emerging themes, discuss controversies, and draw thoughtful clinical implications.

Use 8–10 peer-reviewed scholarly sources, with the majority published within the past five years.

APA (7th edition) formatting is required throughout. Proper citation of all sources is mandatory. Failure to appropriately acknowledge sources constitutes plagiarism.

Suggested Topics

Students may select one of the following topics or propose an alternative topic for instructor approval.

Examples include:

- Sexual addiction / Compulsive Sexual Behaviour
- Sexual desire discrepancy
- Consensual non-monogamy
- Polyamory
- BDSM and kink
- Pornography use and its impact on relationships
- Sexual fantasies
- Infidelity and affair recovery
- Sexual trauma and adult intimacy
- Gender identity development
- Asexuality
- Demisexuality
- Sexual pain disorders
- Erectile dysfunction and relational functioning
- Orgasm differences across genders
- Attachment and sexuality
- Desire across the lifespan
- Menopause and sexual wellbeing
- Sexual functioning after childbirth
- Neurodiversity (ADHD/Autism) and sexuality
- Sexual communication in couples
- Religious beliefs and sexual identity
- Body image and sexual satisfaction
- Digital sexuality (dating apps, sexting, online intimacy)
- Sexual consent and affirmative consent models
- Disability and sexuality

Paper Structure

1. Introduction

- Introduce the topic
- Explain why it is clinically relevant
- Present the purpose of the review
- Briefly describe the scope of the paper

2. Current State of the Literature

Provide a synthesis of contemporary research.

Consider:

- Definitions
- Prevalence
- Major theoretical models
- Historical evolution of the topic
- Current empirical findings

Focus on integrating the literature rather than summarizing one article at a time.

3. Human Development and Sexuality

Examine the topic through a developmental perspective.

Possible considerations include:

- Attachment
- Family of origin
- Developmental milestones
- Identity formation
- Lifespan development
- Trauma
- Neurobiology
- Relationships

4. Diversity and Cultural Considerations

Discuss how the literature addresses diversity, including relevant aspects such as:

- Culture
- Ethnicity
- Gender
- Sexual orientation
- Socioeconomic status
- Religion
- Disability
- Age and developmental stage

And, reflect on whose voices are represented, and whose may be missing. Give a voice to the clinician in you.

This section is the heart of your paper. Move beyond describing the literature by critically evaluating it.

Possible (not limited) questions include:

- How do culture, gender, sexual orientation, religion, socioeconomic status, or other contextual factors influence our understanding of this topic?
- How might different therapeutic orientations (e.g., attachment-based, CBT, psychodynamic, systemic, sex-positive, feminist, queer-affirming) conceptualize or approach this issue differently? (You can contrast two approaches, or deepens the one that feels the most align with your therapeutic view).

- How has this literature challenged, confirmed, or expanded your own understanding of sexuality? What assumptions or personal biases became more visible as you engaged with the research?
- Based on your review, what are the most important clinical takeaways? How might this knowledge influence the way you assess, conceptualize, or work with future clients?

Demonstrate independent thinking while grounding your arguments in the literature.

5. Conclusion

Summarize the major findings of your review.

Reflect on future directions for research and what clinicians should take away from the current evidence.

Remember that evidence-based practice requires more than understanding the research. It involves integrating the best available evidence with clinical judgment, cultural humility, ethical practice, and the unique lived experience of each client.

Evaluation

Students will be evaluated on their ability to:

- Demonstrate a comprehensive understanding of the topic
- Integrate and synthesize contemporary research
- Critically evaluate the literature
- Apply findings to clinical practice
- Incorporate developmental and cultural perspectives
- Communicate ideas clearly and professionally
- Adhere to APA (7th edition) formatting and citation standards

Professionalism, Collaboration, and Engagement (20%) – OVER THE COURSE OF THE SEMESTER

This course explores topics that are deeply human and, at times, deeply vulnerable. Becoming a competent sex therapist requires more than acquiring knowledge—it requires developing the capacity to remain present with complexity, approach differences with curiosity, and create the conditions where others feel safe enough to be authentic.

This component of your grade reflects the way you contribute to our learning community throughout the semester. It includes, but is not limited to:

- Being actively present and engaged in discussions, experiential activities, and peer learning.
- Helping cultivate a classroom culture where everyone feels safe enough to participate, recognizing that each person arrives with unique life experiences, values, identities, cultures, and beliefs.
- Supporting your peers in speaking openly through empathy, respectful listening, curiosity, and thoughtful engagement rather than judgment or debate.
- Demonstrating professionalism through respectful communication, confidentiality during experiential exercises, accountability, and openness to receiving and offering feedback.
- Showing reflective capacity by recognizing your own assumptions, emotional reactions, and areas for continued growth with humility and curiosity.

One of the greatest privileges, and responsibilities, of working in sex therapy is that clients entrust us with conversations they may have never spoken aloud before. Many arrive carrying shame, fear, uncertainty, or years of silence. Before we can invite others into that level of vulnerability, we must first learn to tolerate it within ourselves.

While personal self-disclosure is never expected, I invite you to approach this course with courage, openness, and compassion for yourself and for one another.

My hope is that together we create a classroom where learning feels both intellectually rigorous and deeply human, where respectful disagreement is welcomed, curiosity is valued over certainty, and every student feels supported in finding their own authentic clinical voice.

Course Policies

Late Assignments

Graduate students are expected to submit all assignment by the due dates stated in the syllabus. A late assignment is one that is submitted after the due date or after any extension has expired.

If exceptional circumstances prevent a student from meeting the due date, students should contact the instructor and request an extension. Situations will be considered on a case-by-case basis.

Being busy, pressured with outside work, or having competing academic commitments are not usually considered valid reasons to receive extensions.

Late Submission Deductions will apply as follows:

- -1 point if submitted within 24 hours after the due date
- -2 points if submitted within 48 hours after the due date
- -5 points deducted if submitted within 3-4 days after the due date
- -10 points if submitted within 5-7 days after the due date
- -20 points if submitted more than 7 days after the due date
- Papers submitted more that 2 weeks late will not be graded

Students are encouraged to plan on finishing their papers before the due date, so that normal life fluctuations do not interfere with submission due dates. If requesting an extension on compassionate grounds, students must communicate any extenuating circumstance in writing (by email to the instructor). These will be evaluated on a case-by-case basis; deductions may still apply.

Students who are granted disability accommodations must attempt to meet due dates before requesting extensions (do not request extensions earlier than 48 hours before the due date). Extensions for these students are typically capped at 5 days, after which the deduction schedule will apply.

Participation

All MC courses encourage active engagement in discussion, dialogue, role plays and similar exercises in order to receive the maximum educational benefits. Participation includes constructive criticism and the negotiation of different perspectives and ideas. Recognizing that there are many forms of participation a range of forms and styles are welcomed. Active engagement means being attentive. Similarly, it is recognized that there are situations in which learning to hold one's counselor to not participate verbally are valuable learning experiences.

Consistent attendance and a willingness to be actively involved in classroom discussions, small group activities, and at times classroom presentations or role plays assists in increasing a vibrant learning community.

Many MC courses include a participation component and, in some cases, assignments specify that participation will be graded. In such cases the criteria for participation will be made known along with the requirements for grade achievement.

Professional Writing

Assignments require error-free writing that uses standard English conventions and logical flow of organization to address topics clearly, completely, and concisely. CityU requires the use of APA style.

Acceptable and Unacceptable Uses of AI

Any student that decides to use AI tools to edit their written work must disclose this in writing upon submission as a comment on their BrightSpace assignment submission.

Students are permitted to use AI tools for basic editing (syntax, punctuation, spelling, and thesaurus functions) , but not for developing the content of their paper.

If a student submits writing that appears to be developed by AI (impersonal, general, lofty and conceptual, rather than reflective and subjective), they will be asked to re-write the paper, and a 20% deduction will apply.
